HAMPTON PARK FACTOIDS

Curated by Kevin Eberle, author of "A History of Charleston's Hampton Park"

- Hampton Park was originally the "front yard" of a large plantation called "The Grove" which spread from Rutledge Ave. to the Ashley River.
- Former Charleston architect Sandy Logan designed the snack stand in a pared down Victorian style in 1984. It was originally operated by Linda's Hotdogs and got a good review by the newspaper!
- Hampton Park was named in honor of Gen. Wade Hampton, whose last public appearance had been at the Exposition in 1901 to celebrate the 100th anniversary of the University of South Carolina.
- The bandstand was built for the Exposition, but it has been moved twice in its history and totally rebuilt.
- During the Civil War, the park was used as a prisoner of war camp for Union soldiers who were being moved from Andersonville, Georgia to a new facility being built in Florence, SC.
- More than 200 of them died because of bad conditions and were buried in unmarked graves about where the parking lot on the Wagoner Terrace side of the park is today.
- After the conclusion of the war, black leaders in Charleston built a wooden fence around the graveyard and erected a sign dedicating it to the "Martyrs of the Race Course."
- The next day, approximately 9,000 freed black Charlestonians held an impromptu celebration at the site which included military parades by the famous Massachusetts 54th.
- That celebration became an annual event and is generally regarded as the first Memorial Day ever celebrated in America.
- North Central is the best neighborhood. #fact
